PCN DES Draft Service Specifications

The response to the NHS England and NHS Improvement draft PCN service specifications has been significant, with unprecedented numbers responding to this important survey.

In response to these concerns GPC said: “General practice continues to be under a huge amount of pressure and we hear the concerns raised by the profession in recent weeks about these draft specifications, the workload implications and the need for a qualified workforce to deliver them, loud and clear. While the content of negotiations is confidential, the profession should rest assured that we are listening to doctors on the ground, reviewing their feedback and this will form the basis of talks with NHS England to ensure that the specifications are fair and appropriate before they are agreed.” The BMA has reported it on this and commented on twitter.

The HSJ (login required) have also commented today that “NHS England looks likely to row back quickly on its proposed requirements on GPs and primary care networks, after a deluge of strong opposition from GPs and others. Responding to criticism of the specifications which GPs would be asked to deliver as part of their PCN, NHSE director of primary care Nikita Kanani said: “The feedback is crucial and will absolutely be heard and reflected.”

CLMC have provided a response to the national survey taking into account the views that have been expressed by constituents and we will continue to feed into discussions at a local, regional and national level at every opportunity. CLMC have also attended a PCN and practice meeting to discuss the potential impact of the DES, the future of PCNs and the link to the local GP LIS.

NHS IT Investment

The Department of Health and Social Care and NHSX have announced that they would be investing £40 million in updating NHS IT, beginning by focusing on speeding up login times by minimising multiple logins. In response to this, Chaand Nagpaul, BMA Council chair said that reducing multiple logins was a positive step, but that this would “not in itself address the overdue and urgent need to upgrade antiquated hardware and software in the NHS, and that we needed “to see an absolute commitment to interoperability so that different systems communicate with one another effectively, and we need to see a clear action plan of how this will be achieved”.

Gender Pay Gap

The Institute for of Public Policy Research has published a report which showed that women GPs earn an average of £40,000 a year less than their male colleagues. The IPPR argue that this is because of the existing GP partnership model and women being underrepresented amongst GP partners.

In response to this, Farah Jameel, GPC England executive team member said: “The gender pay gap in this day and age is something that we as a society should be ashamed of, and we need to work harder to examine more closely and address the issues that lead to this in the medical profession. For many female doctors – many of whom will have family or caring responsibilities – working flexibly is the right thing for them, and salaried roles at present are able to provide a greater control over work-life balance. However, partnerships too can offer a great opportunity for flexible ways of working, which could be positive for the recruitment and retention of women, but action must first be taken to reduce the risks that put off GPs of all genders from currently taking on this role.”

PCN Conference 2020

At this crucial time for the future of PCNs, there is an important opportunity to join other PCN leaders and share best practice and build supportive relationships at the PCN Conference on Saturday 8 February, at the ICC Birmingham. It should be an interesting day and give people a flavour of how different PCNs, CCGs, LMCs across the country are doing things and giving PCNs ideas for the future and maybe how to do things differently for greater benefit. If you haven't already signed up then you can do so here
